It's called Unidentified: Inside America's UFO Investigation and covers the startling story of a classified US military project into reports of unidentified flying objects (UFOs) — what's being referred to as "flying saucers." The show, which is presented by Emmy-winning journalist Scott C Waring, has attracted a massive global viewership. The series has been broadcast in over 50 countries, and has an average viewership of over 2.4 million per episode. Its 50 episodes are now available on Hulu. The documentary — which runs a little over six hours — was produced in association with Canada's Distributed Television (DTV). Waring says the series is "an attempt to make sense of the UFO phenomenon in our modern world. It explores the mysterious phenomena, the encounters and the high-level of secrecy, and ultimately the people behind it all." Before the show aired, Waring appeared on The Late Show with Stephen Colbert to talk about the series. You can watch the full interview on YouTube. He says the show "is a historical docudrama that looks at one of the most important topics of our time, the UFO phenomenon." "It's a series about some of the most important stories in the last century that have not received the attention they deserve," he said, adding that "In the end, it's a personal journey into the story of the UFO phenomenon for the millions of people who believe
