Q: How to Change the View of an active Windows Explorer.ini

Is it possible to change the view of the active windows explorer.ini? I want to have it different every time I open the explorer.

A: I assume you are using Windows XP.

1. Create a new text file and open it in Notepad.
2. Save it as "explorer.ini" and leave the filename box blank.
3. Close notepad and in Windows explorer, go to View -> Change View -> List.
4. Make sure the folder you wish to view is selected (in the "List view" screen) and OK.

This is very basic and can be done with any text editor. If you want a more complex solution, you can read the following links: Date: 28th August, 2017 I know what you are thinking. Yes, there's really not much to write about in the first week of August! What's the point of the blog then? And you'd be right. However, I recently took part in the European Book Blogger event organised by the European Book Festival. Over the past weekend we attended four events at four different locations across Germany – so plenty of opportunity to see other countries and learn about European publishing in the process. I'll be talking about the event in more detail in a separate blog post, but I can tell you that it was a great experience, and I was very glad to be able to spend time with some other people who are all working hard to spread the word about books and the publishing industry. A few weeks ago I attended the launch of the publication of a debut crime thriller called “Sparrow Green” by Paris-based novelist Karen Langenheld. The book was launched in a packed room at the British Library in London and featured a number of guests from the world of publishing, as well as some of
