The use of breast-conserving surgery (BCS) for the treatment of early breast cancer has been increasing steadily in the United States over the past decade. This study examines trends in the use of BCS from 1994 through 2000 and the impact of patient, disease, and hospital factors on the likelihood of receiving BCS. Data from the National Cancer Institute's Surveillance, Epidemiology, and End Results (SEER) program (1994-2000) were analyzed using unconditional logistic regression to estimate relative risks (RR) of receiving BCS versus mastectomy. Poisson regression was used to determine factors associated with receiving BCS. The proportion of women aged 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to hand held guns and, more particularly, to the safe storage of such hand held guns. 2. Description of the Prior Art The proliferation of high powered rifles, handguns, and similar hand held weapons over the past 100 years has resulted in a large increase in the number of accidents and injuries caused by improperly or unintentionally discharged weapons. In order to prevent such accidents, all states 3e33713323
