Recent studies of a multigene family encoding RNA polymerase II coactivator proteins (COP) suggest that COPs are involved in gene regulation and cell differentiation. In this study, we have raised antibodies against three closely related COPs, known as p19, p37, and p42/p52 COP. The antibodies showed different patterns of staining of several cell lines, suggesting their role in cell differentiation. In the testis, coimmunostaining of the antibody against p37/p42/p52 COP with antibodies against the alpha and beta tubulin revealed that the three COPs are associated with the Golgi apparatus. Using the antiserum against p42/p52 COP, the three proteins were coimmunostained with the spermatogonia-specific marker (POU-V), which indicates that COPs are present in the nuclei of late spermatogenic cells, the spermatids. They are also found in the sperm nuclei. These results suggest that the COPs may play roles in gene regulation during spermatogenesis, and may be necessary for the final development of the sperm.Q: List files in a particular directory with full path I need to list the files (including folder) in a particular directory.
