The history and development of the commercialization of fixed prosthodontics is reviewed from the perspective of the first widely available commercial crowns in 1923 through the major growth of this market from the 1930s to the early 1970s. The first dental laboratory to market commercially the first all-porcelain system was Siemens, in 1923. The patent rights of the first porcelain system were acquired by the Merck Company in 1928. The application of porcelain fused to metal for crown and bridge work was developed by Keystone Bridge Company, Ltd, in 1931. The landmark development in modern prosthodontics was the replacement of the traditional transmucosal appliances with customized all-ceramic restorations, first achieved by the development of the porcelain-fused-to-metal class of all-ceramic crowns. The first removable system using all-ceramic restorations was developed by Benedict and Co, Inc, in 1959. The major development of the market was the increase in the potential patient base and
