I have a database with different tables. One of those tables is called table_user, which has columns user_id, 1stname, lastname, email, password, birthDate, gender and photo. I am using a JOIN to get all the users related to that project. This is my query: SELECT * FROM table_user, table_project, table_project_user_role, table_assign_user_role, table_user_sessions, table_session_user, table_user_comments, table_comment_user WHERE table_user.user_id = table_project.user_id AND table_project.project_id = table_project_user_role.project_id AND table_project_user_role.user_id = table_assign_user_role.user_id AND table_assign_user_role.role_id = table_user_sessions.assign_role_id AND table_user_sessions.user_id = table_session_user.user_id AND table_session_user.session_id = table_user_comments.comment_id AND table_user_comments.user_id = table_comment_user.user_id AND table_user_comments.comment_id = table_user.comment_id AND table_user.user_id = 1 The problem that this query return a lot of results from table_user_comments and I think it can be due to the fact that the user_id is a primary key in the table_user comments. I would like to remove the information that returned only from this query. For example, it would remove (from the query above) all the rows of table_comments and keep only the information of comments that belong to the user that it return for that user_1cb139a0ed
