Create shortcuts for files, commands and websites Create submenus Create contextual menus Use free version of PopSel Download With Full Crack Offline mode Remote control Windows & Linux version Freeware Updatable [Adsorptive] [Adsorptive] Check out the latest versions of the most popular PDF reader software. Download them for free and decide for yourself. You have two different ways to perform a normal or batch file execution. One of them is "double click", the other one is "shortcut". The difference is that in the first case, the execution of the file will be executed by the OS (operating system), in the second case the execution will be performed by the application (executable file). Both can be combined by adding a little "magic" to the command string. So, to execute a file, in order to do that it is necessary to add the "open" command, but the application used to launch it needs to understand this command (or the parameter) and run it (or not, according to the application). This is how you can execute a file with a right clicking on its shortcut: Double click to launch the file. Right click to execute the application. To execute a file by a shortcut: Add a "command" parameter to the shortcut. Now, the right clicking will open the application associated with the shortcut. To execute a file by a right clicking on its shortcut: Click in the command field of the "properties" of the shortcut. Now, add the "open" command to the command string and double click to launch the file.
