The bank said it had cut the benchmark Selic rate by a full percentage point to 12.75% from 14.5%. The central bank has raised the key Selic rate four times this year and has also cut the growth and inflation forecasts for the year, which stood at 4.2% and 15.0% respectively. Growth forecast was cut to 3.1% from 4.2% and inflation forecast was lowered to 11.3% from 12.8%, as there were downward revisions on the initial estimates. The central bank also said it would maintain its $35-billion-dollar bond buying programme at least until mid-2013, according to the revised forecasts. The central bank also reiterated that it was unlikely to reduce the bond buying programme because it considered it "an important means of promoting the stability of the country's foreign exchange markets". The central bank said its board had reviewed the consequences of the measures taken since the start of the year and that it was "prepared to adjust the monetary policy stance in an appropriate way, in order to achieve an appropriate level of inflation". Argentina's economy is in a deep recession and its currency has lost over 40% against the US dollar this year. The bank said it had raised interest rates twice in the last two weeks in the hope of restoring financial stability. The central bank has already halved the amount of money that commercial banks must hold in reserves and last week the government passed a tax reform measure designed to raise $7.3bn over the next 12 months. It also announced a plan to sell $28bn in 20-year bonds next week.
